Golden Idea

You now have everything you need to land an abundance of interviews on a consistent basis. Here's how to connect everything together + a weekly routine you can follow until you land your job offer.

Importance

What's the main reason this idea is important to understand?

- Theory and strategy is important, but I want to make sure you have a list of actions to walk away with and run for the next year to ensure that you actually get those interviews.

Pillars Of Getting Interviews

1. Psychic Job Hunting

- You should now have a fundamental understanding of the psychology behind landing interviews, from both you and your employer.
- These principles build up all the tools and lessons we explored through the rest of the course.

2. Resume + LinkedIn Strategy

- You now should have an excellent Resume and LinkedIn — before you land that first interview, that is truly all that people see from you.

3. Experience Alchemy

- You should also know exactly how to get experience to put on your resume, especially if you're early in this journey.
- At this point, you should have already gotten a few unpaid internships or are at least on the journey to landing those.

4. Application Cartography

- You should know how to find companies to apply to based on what your goals are, and should have a system that you can run weekly to generate more and more companies.

5. Money Grows On Trees: Networking 101

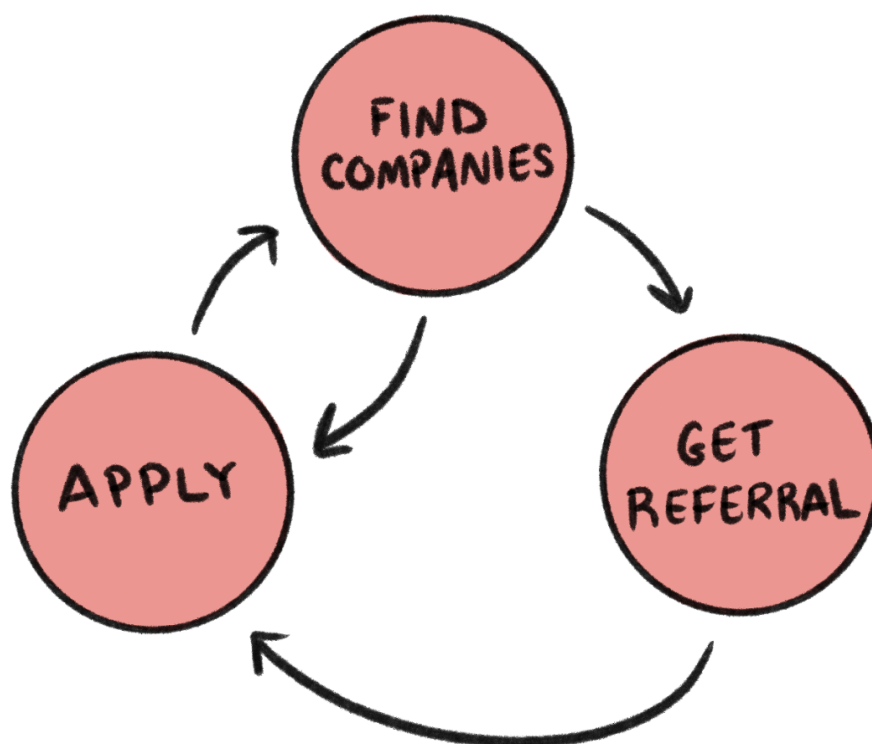

- You should understand how to leverage your LinkedIn profile to build a network & get on informational interviews with people at companies you want to work for.

6. Golden Goose of Referrals

- You should know how to turn your network into referrals on a consistent basis & understand the tactics behind landing them.

High Level Framework

Weekly Routine

1. Use Application Cartography to find 10-15 new companies in your Zone of Focus to apply to.
 - Warm Leads — start with companies where you already know people at.
 - Cold Leads:
 - Location Hacking, Career Fair, and Alumni for small to mid-level companies.
 - Google + GitHub List for name-brand / FAANG companies.
 - Categorize Them
 - Highlight the companies that have your desired role actively open
 - Bold the companies that will have that role open in the future
2. Acquire Referral + Secondary Contact \(Every Time\)
 - Start with the highlighted roles that are already open — go for a referral ASAP, hustle for it.
 - If you already know someone there, then message them directly.
 - If not, use our LinkedIn connection script and find 10-15 people for EACH company that are alumni of your school, young, and in tech at that company.
 - Remember, this is a heuristic — if you can't find people who fit that, then do your best and message people as close to you. You MUST hit at least 15, especially for already open roles.
 - Depending on how important the role is for you, you can message more than 15 — up to 30-40 just to get that referral ASAP.

- Keep grinding for 2-5 days (depending on how volatile the position is) — if you can't find a referral at that point, then cold apply — but keep going for the referral.
 - Any open application you MUST act fast. You only have 2-5 days before you need to apply, so get that referral ASAP.
 - If the position is closing fast and the person can't get on a call soon, then ask them for the referral via chat.
 - But otherwise, do it over the call.
- After you ask them for a referral, ask for secondary contact — hiring manager, recruiter, other software engineer, etc.
 - Useful before and after application.
 - Send that secondary contact an email — ideally get on a call with them, but if it's a recruiter, then just send your resume and try to get a response.
- Do this for EVERY role you apply to — and you'll end up with 50%-75% warm applications with referral. But that will only happen if you try with everyone.

Scramble & Reattempt

- Week by week by week — keep on finding 10-15 new companies every single week. Do not stop until you have received your offer.

Fortune is in the Follow-Up

- Follow up ~10 times for every single person you contact, if possible. We don't care at all if they "get annoyed" — if they don't respond to you in the first place, that's already the worst that can happen.
- Never abandon a message without following up 10 times. NEVER.

Each month, I want to see 50-70 applications submitted with referrals to 30+ — especially during peak hiring season.

- In the fall, you don't need to restrict yourself to only 10-15 companies a week. If you can find more, FIND MORE. The more you apply to with a referral the better your outcomes are going to be, and the faster they are.
